Internal

1.1 European Languages in Translation: Cultural Identity and Intercultural Communication

The European Humanities Research Centre (EHRC) of the University of Oxford is organizing a second workshop as part of its three-year project on European Languages in Translation, financed by the John Fell OUP research fund. The workshop will be held on 25-26 September 2014, following the success of the inaugural workshop on History, Ideology and Censorship in Translation, held in 2013. This second workshop will be devoted to translation, cultural identity and intercultural communication within the European context and beyond. It will take place in the Taylor Institution.

Keynote speakers: Christina Schaeffner and Patrick Zabalbeascoa

For further information and a link to the full Programme and the Registration pages please visit <http://www.ehrc.ox.ac.uk/Translation2014> - registration is open until Sunday 21st September or until fully booked, and members of Oxford University are eligible for a reduced registration fee.

This year's event will be followed by one more workshop, in the autumn of 2015, which will explore other aspects of European translation. Details of this will be announced on the EHRC website: www.ehrc.ox.ac.uk.

Organised by Martin McLaughlin and Javier Muñoz-Basols

2.4 Sibéal Annual Conference

Sibéal Irish Postgraduate and ECR Feminist & Gender Studies Network will hold its annual conference in Trinity College Dublin on the 21st and 22nd of November 2014. The conference invites papers that engage with the theme of:

Gender and Metamorphosis

‘Metamorphosis’ implies fluidity, liminality and processes of change. As a scientific term, it characterises the abrupt biological development of a species after hatching or birth. This idea of an in-between space or state, of growth, transition and transformation has captured the imagination of philosophers, poets and writers throughout history. In rejecting essentialist fixed identity categories, feminist scholars too have sought to understand how gender intersects with other identities, paying attention to how these are performed in and through gendered bodies.

This conference hopes to inspire postgraduate and early career researchers from all disciplines engaging with gender and feminism. We hope to facilitate practical and theoretical based projects, and encourage researchers to submit panels, proposals for workshops, round tables, feminist performance or exhibitions.

Themes might include but need not be limited to the following:

Gender identities in transformation • Gender embodiment • Gender Performativity
Post-colonial identities • Intersectionality • Space, Place and Gender • LGBTQ Institutions in flux • Gender and Religion • Medical identities, medicalized bodies
Feminism(s) • Gender & Migration • Gender & Sexuality

Abstracts of no more than 250 words should be completed on the template available to download from <http://sibeal2014.wordpress.com> and www.sibeal.ie. Deadline for submission is 26th September 2014. For
